The Global Commission on the Economy and Climate is a major new international initiative comprising former heads of government and finance ministers and leaders in the fields of economics, business and finance.

The Commission's flagship project, The New Climate Economy, brings together leading research institutes and economists from six continents to analyze the risks and benefits of climate action. It will make recommendations to the world's governments, business and finance leaders on how to achieve lower-carbon economic growth and development.

Speakers at the event will include former President of Mexico and Chair of the Commission Felipe Calderon, President of Colombia Juan Manuel Santos, Prime Minister of Norway Jens Stoltenberg, ministers from the other countries commissioning the project – Ethiopia, Indonesia, Korea, Sweden and the UK – and Project Director Jeremy Oppenheim.
